BLAMED FOR WOMAN'S DEATH.
Coroner's Jury Censures Erie Road for Fatal Accident to Mrs. Cameron.

ROCKWOOD, N. J., Nov. 29. W. L. Colvin, a youthful extra brakeman on the Erie Railroad, admitted to Coroner Tracey tonight that he had not been fully instructed as to his duties while acting as a ground man for a freight train and said his conductor, Frank Wood, had neglected to inform him. This was offered as the sole reason why Mrs. Emma F. Cameron, wife of A. J. Cameron, a brand manufacturer in Philadelphia, was killed here last Wednesday afternoon while a freight train was backing across the main street on a private and unprotected switch.

Colvin's duty was to go ahead of the freight train and warn teamsters and pedestrians. Instead of this he walked alongside the train and was busy watching a horse that had been frightened by a dog. Colvin said he did not see Mrs. Cameron approaching the crossing. None of the train crew saw the woman and Engineer Frank Wood says he stopped the train when Daniel Helms, a grocer, indicated to him that some one was under the cars.

Conductor Wood had testified before young Colvin took the stand, and the latter's general admission saved him a conviction. Several eyewitnesses testified.

The jury censured the railroad for its lack of protection at this crossing and for the neglect of brakemen in warning pedestrians.

A petition is being circulated urging the village trustees to tear up the private switch.

GLAZIERS DIDN'T WIN.
Employers Deny That the Strike Was a Victory for the Men.

The statements made by the officers of the Sheet and Plate Glass Glaziers' Union that the glaziers who went on a general strike about two months ago had gone back to work, having gained their demands except at the shop of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, were denied yesterday by the employers. The only thing that was correct in the statements, they say, was that the strikers went back. They returned to work unconditionally, however, a representative of the companies said, and lost the strike.

E. P. Shattuck, lawyer for the association, said yesterday.

When the strikers returned an injunction was pending against them restraining them from interfering with the business or property of the association. Bricks and stones had been thrown at trucks with plate glass and a great deal of damage was done in this way and valuable plate glass windows were also broken. The strikers did not return to work in the shop of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company simply because there was no strike in its shops. The strikers gained nothing. The strike was lost when they went back.

As a result of the Newark fire the New York Aldermen have asked the Superintendent of Buildings to have a thorough inspection made of all loft and factory buildings in the city, with a view to issuing and enforcing orders to abate any dangerous conditions that may exist on account of lack of adequate fire protection.

WHOLE ROB BENNY NOW.
International Gang of 12-Year-Olds to, but They're Pinched.

Benny Landee, who is 12 years old, home to his father at 1223 Avenue C yesterday afternoon and on the same train within three days cried: "Oh, Papa, I am robbed." So Benny's last night led Benny to the East Sixty-seventh street police station and he explained that he had a sickness of being robbed so often and having to give up his clothes and groceries and pennies to from him and coming home with wails on the jaw at the hands of the leader of the Young Battle Row Gang of East Sixty-first street and First avenue.

The police, seeing that something had been done, fired up a bundle of old clothes marked two fresh nickels and sent Benny out last night as a decoy. Behind he walked Benny's papa and two Headquarters men.

In front of a moving picture show East Sixty-third street and First avenue Benny and his old clothes bundle of got a nibble. The loiter boys jumped him and grabbed the bundle. They were standing on Benny's face and niggling the marked nickels when Benny's father could resist no longer the impulse to interfere.

The two Central Office men here took Benny and his father and the other boys apart and took the three prisoners to the station house. The boys who had assaulted Benny said they were Giuseppe Fretti of 332 East Sixty-third street, Willie Marcus, 12 years old, of Second avenue, and Abe Kurach, 12 years old, of 223 East Sixty-second street.

Giuseppe says he "works at squeaking shoes in a candy store" and is an Italian. Willie Marcus says he is German. Abe Kurach says he is a Bohemian. Benny the assaulted, is a Jew. As for the Headquarters men, their names are Morris and McManus. They are both American. The Gerry society will look after the three prisoners today.

WOMAN'S STORY OF ASSAULT.
Phoned Brooklyn Police That Footpad Beat and Robbed Her.

At about 9 o'clock last night a woman voice came over the telephone to Brooklyn detective bureau saying that the owner had been set upon by footpads on a lonely stretch of road at Midway street and Albany avenue and if she screamed things might have been worse than they were. There were three footpads, she said, and they snatched her pocketbook and knocked two of her teeth out.

The woman said she was Miss E. Baldwin of 1208 Cortelyou road and was telephoning from a drug store Nostrand avenue and Clarkson street. Police men with a captain to lead them went out from the Snyder avenue police station and beat through the bushes the neighborhood of Midway street Albany avenue. They found nothing then they went to the address which Baldwin had indicated. They found Mary Kelley, who said that she had played a Miss Baldwin a month ago, that she hadn't seen her in the interval. The drug store keeper had a hazy idea of a woman coming into his store and dialing over the telephone. He remembered that she was hysterical, that was all.

"I have not worn an overcoat in eleven years."
"How's that?"
"Well, if you've got the right underwear, that's enough."
It turned out that the speaker wore Jaeger Underwear.
That's as it should be. More protection in a suit of Jaeger than in two suits of any other brand.
